BIOGRAPHY + ARTIST STATEMENT

Tara Jordan is a London-based artist currently studying MA Fine Art in UAL: Central Saint Martins who believes the artifacts left behind from processes of self-creation are often messages from the unconscious. Through collaborative events, viewers are invited to engage with these artifacts, blurring the lines between performer and audience. This participatory approach emphasizes the performance of the self as key to its existence.

Driven by an obsessive fascination with intricacies of the communication machine, which may form the foundation of all human connections via the conscious and verbal or unconscious and physical. It's a psychodynamic journey that seeks to decipher the hidden messages that shape our narrative selfhood. With a contemporary approach to storytelling and personal history, an autoethnographic exploration of the non-linear is embarked upon, bridging the remembered with the present and exploring online processes of self-creation.
